

Staff

Allison Stone
Program Director, East Africa

Geoffrey Onyambu
Research Associate

Cecilia Nekesa
Field Manager

Emma Smith
Research Associate

Francis Meyo
Senior Policy Manager

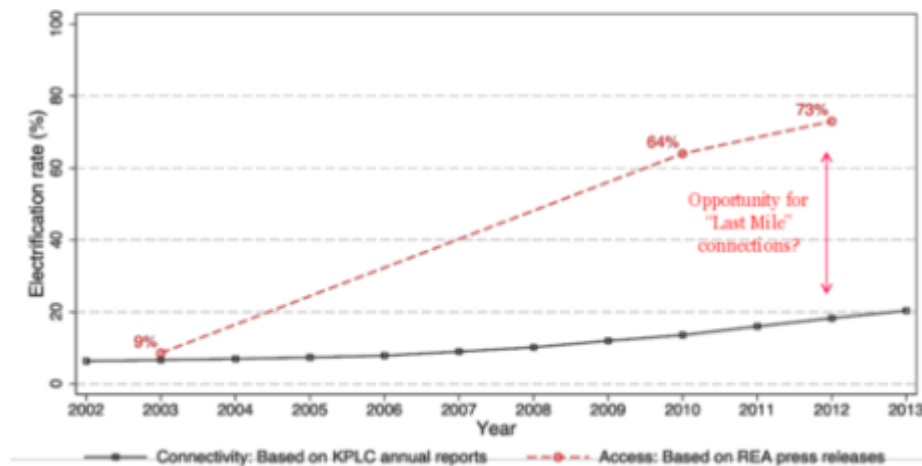

Date

June 14, 2016

Big data and road safety_Arianna Legovini.pptx
Improving Efficiency Courts_Lacey Ramirez.pptx
Kenya Patient Safety IE_Lupe Bedoya.pptx

The Problem

In May 2012, Kenyan newspapers reported that “73% of the population in the rural areas [now had] access to electricity,” with “access” defined as living within 1.2km of a low-voltage line.

Nzoia Irrigation_Yoshida and Ndunda.pptx
Sustainable Mobility for All_Nancy Vandycke.pptx
How do we interpret evidence_Aidan Coville.pptm
Maximizing infrastructure returns_Aidan Coville.pptm

DIME Forum: Using Evidence to Improve Policy and Program Designs

How can we use evidence more effectively to inform and improve government policies and programs?

IPA Kenya attended the Development Impact Evaluation division (DIME)'s forum on Using Evidence to Improve Policy and Program Designs in Nairobi, and presented IPA evaluations in the energy and sanitation sectors that focused on maximizing large-scale infrastructure investments.

Despite the fact that Kenya is one of the largest producers of impact evaluations in the world, this evidence often does not reach its intended audiences, limiting its potential to inform policy. Furthermore, research in its traditional form is often seen as lacking relevance for the operational and political realities that policymakers and practitioners face on a daily basis. DIME works jointly with National Government counterparts to build evidence that focuses on informing policy and operations by working throughout the life cycle of projects to improve the potential for development impacts. With this purpose, this one-day event brought together policymakers, practitioners and researchers in a high-level discussion on how evidence can be used to generate relevant insights from conception to completion of projects, and showcased a series of ongoing impact evaluations that provided examples of how to do this in practice.

Explore the presentations and additional information from the event attached below:

Address Windsor Hotel
City Nairobi
Country Kenya