In the Financial Times, New Survey on COVID-19's Impact on Nine Developing Nations

The Financial Times reports on findings from a new survey of an estimated 100,000 people in Burkina Faso, Bangladesh, Colombia, Ghana, Kenya, Rwanda, Sierra Leone, Nepal, and the Philippines between April and June last year. As Edward Miguel, one of the study's co-authors describes, the results are "dire," with already vulnerable households experiencing "steep drops in employment and income" and "a sharp rise in food insecurity." Note: Article may be gated.

The survey results have been featured in a range of news outlets, including The News International, Scientific American, Scientific American Arabic Edition, SciTech Daily, Yale News, as well as Bangladesh's Dhaka Tribune, The Netherlands' Nederlands Dagblad, NRC, and Trouw, and Spain's Agencia SINC and Europa Press.
