Adapting a Gender-based Violence Response Model to Human Trafficking in Rwanda

Countries with limited resources often struggle to identify and provide adequate services to victims of sex trafficking and labor trafficking. The Isange One Stop Centre (IOSC) model is a local solution put into place in Rwanda to provide a rapid, integrated response to gender-based violence. However, the services offered through this model are not always responsive to the specific needs of victims of trafficking. In this project, researchers from the NGO Never Again Rwanda will pilot and evaluate the IOSC model as a mechanism to provide rehabilitation and reintegration assistance to human trafficking victims. The provision of IOSC services for human trafficking victims will take place at randomized IOSC locations, and researchers will assess the feasibility of launching a full impact evaluation for the application and scaling of the IOSC model.
